E-GOVERNANCE UNDER COMPANIES ACT 2013

Siva Shree. R-II B.Com (CSCA)-B

INTRODUCTION

In this age of well-developed information technology and telecommunications, the Electronic Governance of all business-related activities, administrative activities, and managerial functions of the corporate world, can certainly be very convenient, efficient, transparent, and fully accountable and responsible. Therefore, undoubtedly, e-governance in the corporate sector is an imperative and highly prudent requirement in every country of the world, inevitably including India. As India is one of the major, fast-progressing, and highly influential economies of the world, this e-governance is absolutely essential and beneficial to Indian corporate world, especially in present-day world of cutthroat corporate competition, and ever-increasing need for greater transparency and accountability in the corporate sector. Considering these highly significant facts and business scenarios, the Government of India has rightly promulgated the provisions for e-governance in the corporate sector of the country, in its latest Companies Act of 2013.

E-Governance or Electronic Governance is basically proper and efficient utilization of the technologies of the information technology and telecommunications, for performing various functions and activities by an organization. Such use of Information and Communication Technologies [ICTs] can preferably be made at all levels of a business corporation also, in order to obtain faster and more efficient business activities, greater customer satisfaction, more accountable and transparent corporate administration and management, better profits and satisfaction of the shareholders, and the best possible progress and growth of the corporation.

Major E-Governance Provisions under Companies Act 2013

(A) Maintenance, Security, and Inspection of Books and Records in Electronic Form

Regarding the account keeping and maintenance of records and books related with the business activities of a company, and the well-rounded security and efficient and transparent inspection of these documents, the new Companies Act of India has proper provisions, suggestions, and recommendations. These prudent provisions and recommendations are provided in the Section 120 of the Indian Companies Act of 2013, and the Companies (Management and Administration) Rules of 2014.

The Section 120 facilitates that a company must keep a safe account of all business and management related documents, records, registers, minutes, etc., preferably in the electronic forms, in such a manner that these could easily be inspected or reproduced whenever necessary. Again, the Rules ranging from Rule 27 to Rule 29 of the Indian Companies (Management and Administration) Rules of 2014, further clarify things in this context, as follows:

- As per Rule 27, every listed company, or any other company with 1000 or more shareholders and security holders, must maintain its all such secretarial records and documents preferably [but not necessarily or mandatorily] in the electronic form. The Ministry of Corporate Affairs [MCA] vide its Notification dated 24th July, 2014, has substituted the word 'shall' by the word 'may' in Rule 27 of Companies (Management and Administration) Rules of 2014, and thereby, the task of maintaining such records strictly in the electronic form has been made optional, for time being. However, it will be wise to convert these data and records to the electronic form [from the physical form] as quickly as possible.
- The Rule 28 dictates that the MD, CS, or any other Director or Officer of the company shall be made responsible for proper and safe keeping of all records and documents of the company in electronic or physical form.
- While the Rule 29 provides provision for inspection of all electronic records and reproduction of these as per requirements, the charge for any such reproduction shall not be more than ten rupees per page.

(B) Service of Documents (Section-20)

This advocates that every presentation, submission, or dispatch of company-related documents should preferably be made through electronic means, to the concerned officials, shareholders, or the Registrar.

(C) Notice of Meetings

The notices of the Board Meetings and the General Meetings also to be sent by electronic means and in the prescribed manner, as are described in the Section 173(3), and Section 101, respectively. Also, the Rule 18 of the Indian Companies Rules of 2014 recommends that a record of any failed transmissions of such notices and subsequent re-sending of these must be retained by the company as "Proof of Sending". Notices to shareholders, directors, or auditors regarding electronic voting on a resolution and participation in a general meeting, may also be published on the website of the company. In addition to presenting all details about the concerned meeting, the company has also to clearly mention that the facility of voting through electronic means is available. More information about the sending of notices for general meetings and the electronic voting is provided in the sections below.

(D) Payment of Dividend

As per Section 123, any dividend payable in cash can also be remitted in any electronic mode to the entitled shareholders, besides being paid by Cheques or Warrant.

(E) Admissibility of Certain Documents as Evidence

Any document reproduced from returns, or any document related with the administration, management, or business activities of a company formally filed with the Registrar on paper or in electronic form and duly authenticated by the Registrar, shall be admissible to any proceedings of the company, without any further proof or production of the original documents as evidence.

(F) Voting Through Electronic Means [Electronic Voting System]

Voting through electronic means at the general meetings of a company, is one of the highly significant provisions introduced by the new Indian Companies Act of 2013, to support e-management and governance. Section 108, New Revised Clause 35B of the Listing Agreement of SEBI, and the Rule 20 of the Companies (Management and Administration) Rules of 2014, all emphasize that every listed company or a moderately big company with at least 1000 shareholders, should utilize preferably the facility of voting electronically by the shareholders and members at the general meetings of the company, for passing any resolution (Ordinary/Special).

However, the Ministry of Corporate Affairs [MCA, Govt. of India] vide its Circular dated 17th June, 2014, thoughtfully and liberally decided not to treat the specified provisions for voting through electronic means [electronic voting system], as mandatory till December 31, 2014.

Swift Electronic Voting offers certain exclusive advantages to both the company [and its share transfer agents] and the shareholders, provided it is fully secured and unbiased. Some of the most significant and outstanding advantages of electronic voting [e-voting] are the following:

advantages of electronic voting [e-voting] are the following :

- ▶▶ It is Fast and Cost-Effective
- ▶▶ Full Authenticity
- ▶▶ Reduces Paperwork and Eliminates the Need of Storing the Physical Ballot Papers
- ▶▶ Quick and Accurate Counting of Votes

- ▶▶ Votes are not Delayed or Lost in Transit
- ▶▶ Voting from Everywhere in any time
- ▶▶ Increased Efficiency and Transparency

MAKING SENSE OF BREXIT

Manish Sharma- II M. Com (CS)

INTRODUCTION

It is not a blow against globalization per se. It is a vote against greater economic integration beyond the free flow of goods, services, and capital. Brexit has evoked a spate of comments. These comments fall into broadly two categories. The first set of comments focuses on the short-term and medium-term impact of Brexit on the U.K., Europe and the rest of the world including India. The second goes into the reasons behind this decision of the British. Is there a clear message or is it a confused signal? It is to this aspect this article is devoted.

Impact of globalization

Several analysts have described this decision as a blow to globalization. Is this really so? Or is it a superficial view? Globalisation has been interpreted in many ways. In broad terms, globalization denotes the free movement of goods, services, capital, funds, ideas, technology and people across countries. Many people think globalization is a recent phenomenon, this is not true. This has been going on for centuries. What has made it unique in recent times is the speed of the movement. Great Britain and many other countries in Europe have reached the present level of economic development only because of this free movement. In both demographic and geographic terms, Britain is a small country. It is not the size of the domestic market that determined its growth. London could not have emerged as the financial centre of the world but for the free flow of capital. The gamut of financial services offered by London is geared to meet world demand and not that of Britain alone.

Even after the exit from the EU, Britain cannot remain as an isolated island. It has to be part of an international trade regime which allows for free trade. What then could have motivated a little more than 50 per cent of the population to come out of the EU? It has something to do with the nature of the relationship within the EU.

The EU has evolved over the last seven decades. From a loose arrangement, it has become a tight bureaucratic organization with its jurisdiction extending to multifarious activities. When the euro was created as a common currency, Britain opted out of it. The European Central Bank sets a common monetary policy stance for all member countries. This itself has been a source of irritation to many member countries. This came out prominently at the time of the Greek crisis. With the loss of one instrument of control — namely, the exchange rate variation — the entire burden of adjustment had to be through employment and output changes. As one commentator put it, the EU has moved up its aspiration from the idea of 'common' market to 'single' market. It is this transition which half of Britain has resented. The complex set of regulations emanating from Brussels has made at least a section of the British people feel that they have lost 'independence'. Some of the elite of Britain who voted to 'leave' feel this way. They think that control has moved to unelected bureaucrats in Brussels.

Perils of migration What has induced the 'non-elite' to vote for Brexit was the EU's migration policy. The free movement of people has been the last straw that broke the camel's back. The low-paid jobs in the U.K. have been taken over by migrants predominantly from Eastern Europe. In an economy which has been growing slowly (even though the U.K. is a better performer than other European countries in recent years), this has come as a shock.

The spirit of 'nationalism' still runs high. The poor in Britain feel that they have been cheated by the migrants. Absorbing migrants is not new for Britain. The Asian and African migrants constitute a significant proportion of the population. All this happened when the economy was strong and growing. But this is not the situation now, and the resentment is in one sense natural. However, looked at globally, the poor in the countries from which people migrate have benefited. The British have also gained to the extent that the free movement of people has enabled highly skilled professionals to find positions all over Europe.

The 'leave' vote thus was motivated by two considerations: one, the degree of integration that the EU was trying to impose, and two, the migration policy which allowed a free movement of people across countries.

Globalisation is not really the devil. If the EU arrangement had been restricted only to free movement of goods, services, capital and funds, it could not have led to any deep resentment. It is the attempt at greater economic integration that has been interpreted as a loss of sovereignty and resented. However, there is still a message for globalization. Globalisation, with its emphasis on efficiency (since goods and services will get produced at the least cost centers), can lead to greater inequality theoretically. Within a country also, the more efficient including professionals gain disproportionately. This situation gets worse if economies are growing slowly. The U.S. has always prided itself on saying that the system they have is 'people's capitalism'. Inequalities do not matter much when economies are growing strongly and when new entrants to the labour force find employment easily. Countervailing measures are needed to take care of the adverse impact of globalization. For this reason, we cannot throw the baby out with the bathwater.

Slow growth and technology

The developed countries face a serious dilemma. They have reached a stage in their development when further growth will be slow. This will have implications for absorbing the labour that gets added to the market. Complicating the situation is technological development which is increasingly labour-saving. New technologies have a twofold impact. First, they reduce the demand for labour in general. Second, in particular they make unskilled and semi-skilled work redundant. They demand new skills for which retraining may be needed. Distribution of income has thus become an issue which needs to be dealt with directly.

Brexit is not a blow against globalization per se. It is a vote against greater economic integration beyond the free flow of goods, services, and capital. Labour does not stand in the same category as capital, even though both are factors of production. Migration hurts when the economy is at low ebb. Britain, along with other developed countries, faces a basic problem of coping with a growth potential which is far lower than the growth rate they had seen before 2008. The sociological economic implications of this phenomenon are yet to unravel.

In the wake of global scandals involving kickbacks and accounting fraud, one unlikely country ,India is aiming to set a tone in overhauling its corporate oversight laws.

India, a nation notoriously rife with graft and bribery, was partly motivated to pass the legislation in the wake of an accounting scandal that has been called India's Eron.

The fact that one company could defraud shareholders of such a large sum despite regular audits made painfully obvious need for greater oversight.

MCA Draft :

Ministry of Corporate affairs has constituted a committee under the Chairmanship of Shri Dhanendra kumar, former chairperson of competition commission of India, for framing of National Competition Policy.

MCA invites comments from chambers of the industries, corporate, law firms, members of civil society.
